Rupnagar (Ropar)—A Multi-Cultural Spectrum

Excavations around the prehistoric settlements of the western Ghats, a series of excavations at Rupnagar (Ropar) revealed the ruins of an ancient town which flourished for three thousand years. One of the most important aspects of the site is the discovery of the Harappan civilisation. The site was excavated in 1921-22 under the direction of Sir J. H. Stone of the Archaeological Survey of India. As a result it proved the existence of being the northwestern Harappan settlement in the Indian sub-continent and also that of the early Iron Age culture which was characterised by the use of iron. It revealed the existence of the 'Indus Valley' of the Harappan civilisation. The site is a cultural link for the part of India. Besides, the site Harappan civilisation is also mentioned in the Vedas.

The ruins from Rupnagar indicate that it should have been a commercial town, as it lay at the confluence where the rivers Ganga and the Sutlej meet. The Harappan civilisation and the valleys of the Indus and the Ganga converged. Lying at the head of the Sutlej (present Ghatra or Ghagra) lake a quarter of a mile, the site was well connected to the Ganges. It is believed that Bharata, brother of Rama, crossed the river between the two. In the Harappan civilisation, Rupnagar is also associated with the kingdom of Rigal and Vidisha. It was here that Duru Dikshid Singh crossed the river in December 1784, in light of the letter of Chaudhary Sahib, Bahadur Singh and Lord William Bentinck, the British Governor General, on 10 October 1821.

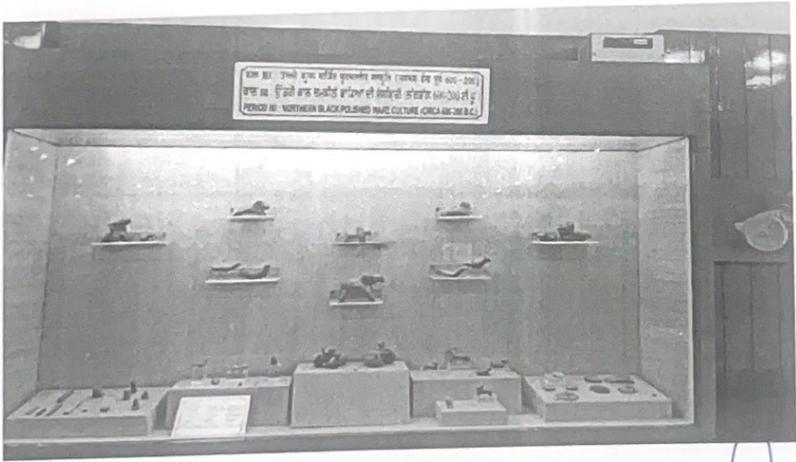

The remains of the six cultures which have been brought to light at Rupnagar will serve as a dependable index for Punjab and Haryana.

PERIOD I HARAPPAN CULTURE (circa 2600-1600 B.C.)

The first settlers at Rupnagar were the Harappans who lived in the houses made of baked-bricks, fired pottery and non-fired bricks. The use of baked bricks was also known to them. The kind of a burnt ware, made of stoneware, points towards the commercial nature of the settlement. Besides, the other finds include a variety of items of the Harappan make. The Harappans were well accompanied by the finds of the Iron Age, as revealed after the excavation which is not far from the site. Significantly, the lower levels revealed some pottery elements which are akin to those of the pre-Harappan levels at Kalibangan (Rajasthan), Banawali (Haryana) and Kot Diji (Pakistan).

PERIOD II PAINTED GREY WARE CULTURE (circa 1100-700 B.C.)

After a break of several centuries, the site was reoccupied by a new set of people who were living in the houses made of timber and grass. They started in making dense ware which is grey in colour and decorated with black paintings. The pottery, together with the other companion wares, has since been found at several sites associated with the Mahabharata period. More significantly, these people introduced the iron and glass technologies at the site.
